FOREWORD

I Was Sitting in the Wrong Seat

The story behind this book

I want to tell you something before we get into the system.

For years, I sat at a desk doing accounting work. On paper, it looked fine. Steady job. Steady pay. A career path that made sense to everyone around me.

But I felt it — that quiet, uncomfortable feeling that I was sitting in somebody else's seat. That this was not where I was supposed to be. That somewhere outside those office walls, there was something waiting for me that I kept pushing to the back of my mind.

So I started small. Ridiculously small.

I was doing nails on the side. My clients would come in and I wanted them to feel good — not just their hands, but their whole experience. So I started mixing foot scrubs and foot soaks in my kitchen. Less than J$5,000 worth of ingredients. Nothing fancy. Just something that smelled nice and worked.

My clients loved it. And that tiny response — that simple 'this is good' — planted something in me I couldn't ignore.

I started selling to the people around me. My coworkers. The same people I sat with every day in that office.

Then I discovered Yoni care. Products designed for women's intimate wellness. I formulated, tested, reformulated. I remember my very first Yoni Oil sale. The client came back and told me she didn't like it.

Most people would have stopped there.

I went back to my kitchen and reformulated it. And when she tried it again — she loved it. That moment taught me something that no business course ever could:

"The first version is never the final version. What separates people who succeed is what they do after the first 'no'."

The Yoni products changed everything. They took the market. Repeat customers. Word of mouth. People saying my hands were blessed. Women speaking life over what I was building before I even believed it myself.

And I was still sitting at that desk.

Over a year passed. I was doing two things at once — running someone else's numbers by day, and building my own business at night and on weekends. The discomfort at the job kept growing.

Not because anything dramatic happened. Just that quiet, persistent feeling.

"You will know when it's time to leave. Not because of logic. Because of how wrong it feels to stay."

When I finally left, I left with something most people don't have when they start a business — proof. Proof that my products worked. Proof that people would pay. Proof that I could do this.

This book is everything I learned — from that first J$5,000 batch of foot scrub to building Najah Chemist into a manufacturing business supplying brands across the Caribbean.

I am not writing this from a place of theory. I am writing this from a kitchen, a reformulation, a repeat customer, and a seat I finally had the courage to leave.

If you are sitting in the wrong seat right now — this book is for you.

CHAPTER 1

The Foundation Most People Skip

Why you are failing before you even start

This is the part most people skip. And it is exactly why they struggle later.

Before you think about products, content, or customers — you need to understand what you are actually building.

You are not building a brand yet. You are building a system.

The system: Attention → Conversation → Conversion → Delivery → Repeat

Everything you do must feed this system. If it does not, it is a distraction.

The Mistake That Kills Most Beginners

Most people start by focusing on the wrong things:

- The perfect logo
- The perfect packaging
- The perfect name
- The perfect time to start

None of these produce your first sale. And without that first sale, none of them matter.

"Readiness does not come before action. It comes after."

I was not ready when I made my first foot scrub. I had no logo. No brand name. No business plan. I had ingredients, a kitchen, and clients who trusted me.

That was enough to start.

Your Only Goal Right Now

Get your first five paying customers.

Not fifty. Not five hundred. Five.

Five customers will teach you more than five months of planning. You will learn what they actually want, how they talk about your product, what questions they ask, and what makes them come back.

Everything you need to know about your business is locked inside those first five sales. You cannot think your way to that information. You have to earn it.

The Identity Shift

Here is something nobody tells you at the beginning:

The moment you make your first sale, something changes inside you. You stop being someone who wants to start a business. You become someone who has a business.

"The first sale is not about money. It is about identity. It is the moment you become a business owner."

Do not wait until you feel like one. Make the sale. The feeling follows.

Your focus right now: One product. Clear communication. First sale. Everything else comes after.

CHAPTER 2

What Actually Sells

And why most people choose the wrong product

The biggest mistake beginners make is choosing a product based on what they like — instead of what solves a visible problem.

You are not selling skincare. You are selling a result.

People do not wake up thinking about ingredients. They wake up thinking about problems:

- Why do I still have dark spots?
- Why does my skin look uneven?
- Why do I feel uncomfortable down there?

Those problems are where sales begin. Your product is the answer — but only if you position it that way.

Weak vs Strong Positioning

■ Weak: Natural handmade soap with shea butter

■ Strong: Fades dark spots and evens skin tone in 4 weeks

The second one tells the customer who it is for, what it does, and why it matters. All in one sentence. That clarity is what stops someone from scrolling.

Why Yoni Products Took Off

When I moved into Yoni care, I did not plan it strategically. But looking back, the reason it worked was simple.

Intimate wellness is a problem women deal with privately. They are embarrassed to talk about it publicly. They are desperate for something that works. And when they find something — they tell their friends quietly, personally, in DMs and WhatsApp messages.

That is word-of-mouth marketing that money cannot buy.

"The best product is not the most beautiful one. It is the one that solves something people are desperate to fix."

How to Choose Your First Product

Test 1: Can you explain the benefit in one sentence? If not, it is too complicated.

Test 2: Does it solve something visible or something people feel strongly about?

Test 3: Can someone understand it in 3 seconds? If they have to think, they will scroll.

Your first product is not your forever product. It is your entry point. Its job is to get attention, start conversations, and teach you what your market actually wants.

"Your product will not be perfect the first time. That is not failure. That is the process."

The market will tell you what to fix. Your job is to listen, adjust, and come back stronger.

CHAPTER 3

Content That Starts Conversations

Not likes. Not views. Conversations.

Content has one job: Get someone to message you.

If your content is not producing messages — it is not working. It does not matter how many views it gets.

■ Failing: 10,000 views · 0 messages

■ Working: 50 views · 3 messages

The second one is making money. The first one is building an audience that does not buy.

The First 3 Seconds

You have 3 seconds to communicate three things: What the product does, who it is for, and why it matters right now.

The 3 Types of Content You Need

1. Problem Content: Speak to the pain. "If you're dealing with dark spots, this is what I use."
2. Product Content: Show it clearly. "Yoni wash back in stock. Ships island-wide."
3. Trust Content: Show activity. "Orders going out today. Your turn?"

Rotate between these three. That is your content system. Nothing else is required.

Simple Video Formula

- Natural light behind you
- Hold the product
- One clear sentence
- 5 to 10 seconds maximum

"Your bathroom with good lighting is better than a studio you do not have yet."

What to Expect

Day 1–3: Low response. This is normal. Do not stop.

Day 4–7: First messages start coming. Your content is warming up.

Day 8–14: Consistent messages. Now you have a system.

Most people quit on day 3. The people who make money are the ones still posting on day 14.

CHAPTER 4

The Conversation That Closes

How to guide someone from interested to paid

The moment someone messages you — that is where money is made or lost.

Most people lose it here. Not because the customer does not want to buy. Because they handle the conversation wrong.

"Sales is not convincing. It is guiding. Lead them to the decision and they will thank you for it."

The Correct Sales Flow

- Price + positioning
- Direction — give them a choice, not a question
- Confirmation
- Payment
- Delivery

Never Just Give the Price

■ Wrong: "It's $1,200."

■ Right: "It's $1,200 or 3 for $2,800. Most of my customers go with the bundle because it lasts longer. Which works better for you — one or the bundle?"

This shifts the customer from 'Should I buy?' to 'Which one should I choose?' — and that is a completely different conversation.

Handling Every Response

They say yes: "Perfect. Let me set that aside for you right now." Then move immediately to payment.

I'll think about it: "No problem at all. Most people start with one and come back for the bundle once they see how it works."

I don't have money: "I understand. I can hold it for you until tomorrow if you're still interested — just let me know."

They go quiet: Follow up once, 24 hours later: "Hey, just checking — still interested? I can hold yours today."

The Language of Confidence

Avoid: 'Let me know' · 'Maybe' · 'I think it will work'

Use: 'Most of my customers' · 'I'll set that aside for you' · 'I can reserve yours now'

CHAPTER 5

Delivering Like a Business

Because the sale is not done when they say yes

The sale is not complete when they agree. It is complete when payment is received and the product is in their hands.

The Post-Sale Flow

Step 1 — Confirmation: "Perfect, I've set that aside for you." Say it immediately. This removes buyer's remorse.

Step 2 — Payment: Send payment details within 60 seconds. Every minute you delay is a minute they can change their mind.

Step 3 — Delivery: "Would you prefer pickup or delivery?" Confirm location, timeline, and cost clearly.

Step 4 — Timeline: "Your order will be ready by tomorrow afternoon." Specific timelines build trust.

Step 5 — Follow-up: 2 to 3 days after delivery: "How is it working for you?" This one message turns buyers into repeat customers.

Why Follow-Up Changes Everything

In Jamaica, word of mouth is everything. Your reputation travels faster than any advertisement.

One customer who feels looked after becomes five customers through referrals. One customer who feels ignored becomes a warning others hear before they even reach you.

"The experience after the sale matters more than the sale itself."

CHAPTER 6

How Money Actually Works

Pricing, profit, and the reinvestment cycle

Profit = (Price – Cost) × Consistency

That formula changes everything once you truly understand it. Consistency is the multiplier. Without it, even a great product makes nothing.

Real Numbers — Yoni Wash Example

Cost: J$3,550 per litre · Yield: 16 bottles of 2oz each

Sell at J$1,200: Revenue J$19,200 · Profit J$15,650

Sell at J$1,500: Revenue J$24,000 · Profit J$20,450

That is from one litre. One investment. One batch. Now imagine you do that three times in a week.

The Bundle Strategy

Single: 1 bottle for J$1,200 · Bundle: 3 bottles for J$2,800

"You do not always need more customers. Sometimes you just need your existing customers to buy more."

The One Rule About Profits

Do not spend your first profits on yourself. Use them to buy more inventory.

The cycle: Sell → Profit → Reinvest → More inventory → More sales → Scale

I started with less than J$5,000. Every time money came in, it went back into the business. That is how a kitchen operation becomes a manufacturing company.

Do not underprice out of fear. Your price communicates your value.

CHAPTER 7

When It's Not Working

How to diagnose exactly what is wrong and fix only that

Most people do not fail because the business does not work. They fail because they misread what is happening and fix the wrong thing.

Problem 1: No Messages → Content problem

Fix: Make the problem more obvious. Be more direct. Post more. Give it 14 days before you judge.

Problem 2: Messages But No Sales → Sales conversation problem

Fix: Use the sales flow from Chapter 4. Guide the decision. Respond faster. Make it easier to say yes.

Problem 3: Slow or Inconsistent Results → Volume problem

Fix: More content. More consistency. More time. This is a patience problem, not a strategy problem.

Problem 4: People Ask and Then Disappear

Fix: Follow up once, 24 hours later: "Hey, still interested? I can hold it for you today." One follow-up. Not five. Not ten. One.

Problem 5: Low Confidence

"Confidence is not something you wait for. It is something you build through repetition."

The cure for low confidence is not more preparation. It is more action.

"Most people quit right before the results begin. The system works — if you stay in long enough to let it."

CHAPTER 8

Leaving the Wrong Seat

The chapter nobody else will write for you

I want to end with the thing that started everything for me. Not the products. Not the sales system. Not the content strategy. The seat.

Most people reading this book are sitting in a seat that does not belong to them. A job that pays the bills but takes something from you every single day.

"But there is nothing responsible about spending your life in the wrong place."

The discomfort I felt in that seat was not a problem. It was information. It was my life telling me — clearly, repeatedly, kindly — that it was time to go.

I left with proof. Real customers. Real sales. Real reviews from women who said my products changed how they felt about themselves.

But I want to tell you something important: You do not need to wait until you have proof to start. You need to start in order to get the proof.

What Women Said That Changed Me

Women started telling me that my hands were blessed. That what I was making was helping them in ways they could not explain. That they felt more confident. More comfortable. More like themselves.

"I am not selling products. I am giving women something to feel good about."

A Word to the Person Who Is Not Ready

You are going to feel unready for a very long time. You are going to feel like you need more time, more money, more knowledge, more certainty before you start.

None of that is true.

The only thing standing between you and your first sale is the decision to make it.

J$5,000 in a kitchen. Nail clients who trusted me. A product I made for them out of care. That is how this started.

"You already have enough to begin. You are just waiting for permission that will never come from anywhere except yourself."

This is that permission.

Start.

What Comes Next

If this book has done what I hoped it would do, you are not just thinking differently. You are ready to move.

The products behind your brand are already made.

Najah Chemist manufactures professional-grade skincare, body care, feminine care, and men's grooming formulas — ready for you to private label and sell under your own brand.
